

Desert Glass

Sarah LePage

the air is tired hot and aching

sand rakes the ground weaving together a small girl she carries an Apache tear smoothed by her cracked palm holding it to the sun she sees herds of elk racing between her fingers silver mountains stretch high piercing the red sky body and land join as she brushes her hand across the ground

releasing crystal to the earth